

PUPILS' HONESTY IS PUT TO TEST

Rich Children More Prone to Steal Than Poor.

New York.—Studies of honesty among school children in cities and towns of the East indicate that children of wealth are more prone to steal than those of the poor.

The tests are being made by psychologists engaged in a "character education inquiry" at the Columbia university.

A majority of the pupils were reported as lying when asked questions to which they felt an affirmative answer should be given. For instance, to "do you read the Bible every day?" Ninety per cent said they did, according to Dr. Mark A. May, one of the psychologists.

Doctor May is on a three-year leave of absence from the Syracuse university faculty.

Ingenious tests were devised to measure such abstract quantities as stealing, lying and cheating tendencies. Children were asked to solve puzzles which involved the use of 60 cents in various forms. The object was to see how many would take the money.

Among the 250 Jewish orphans of New York's East Side, only two others disappeared. When the same test was given to children of the rich in an exclusive school it was found 18 per cent took money, while in one case the child disappeared.

Another child, a girl, hit a 25-cent coin, claimed as error and asked for a second, which also disappeared.
